Editing Systems

This evening consisted of a demonstration by members of the various editing systems on the market. It consisted of 3 parts.

The first was a demonstration by John Noake on the Casablanca., which was well prepared and informative for those members who had not previously seen Casablanca's.

This was followed by a demonstration by Noel Fray, using iMovie which is installed by default in every Apple Mac.

Using film footage of Venice, ne demonstrated the main features of this software.

After the coffeebreak, Michael Wilding demonstrated how to edit using a PC.

He started by demonstrating Movie Maker, which comes installed with every PC running Microsoft Windows, and then moved on to more advanced editing solutions.

It was disappointing that technical problems interrupted an otherwise interesting session.

The evening was most valuable because it enabled members to view editing systems, different to the ones they use.

Attendance 18.
